PART ONE
INTRODUCTION

INTRODUCTION

Today librarians face economic and technological pressures which are rapidly changing many concept of reference service. Public libraries must consider whether to continue to try to reach out to serve nonusers or to concentrate or serving the small but active use group. Active user mean those person who always come to use library resources. Academic libraries are faced with serious problems of rising cost for reference service and shrinking enrolments and budgets.

What is reference service as its most fundamental, it may be defined as answering questions. An individual has a query about a topic and approaches. The reference desk expecting the librarian to provide an answer or indicate where and how an answer may be found. Answers take as many form as questions. The Librarian may point (periodicals) look up data to answer question about the culture, population area of Saudi Arabia or search diligently for books articles and other documents to help answers a query on the benefit and danger of nuclear power.

The trend in library services for the last decade or so has been to given most reference service to those user. Whose education and background lead them to value information. As a group these people are some time called the information literates and they inevitably compose the professional strata of the middle and upper middle classes.

When we speak of serving this group, it is usually in terms of supplying information for the persons who operate within the academic, business, scientific, government or technological environment.

At the other extreme are the non library users, those who in fact may be most in need of information but who rarely if ever, turn to the library.

INFORMATION AND REFERRAL SERVICES (I & R)

Information and referral services take many forms and have numerous names - Information counseling, community information, operation outreach, learning service etc. The primary purpose of I & R centers is to bring reference service to people where they work and where they live. Information and referral service is an effort by the library to reach out to both users and non-users rather than expecting the public to reach out to the library. My project deals with all types of reference material available at one place as useful tools to find out from where you can find information based on the above principles. The information center adapts the library to the need of people instead of asking them (as was the case too often in the past) to adapt to the needs of the library and the librarian. Centers are located in different places without library service.

TYPES OF QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS (I & R)

I & R services might be called upon to answer such typical question as I am in need of some help to find the Hadith on Idd ul Zuha. Where do I go whom do I see where can I find. Information on a pre-Islamic culture Do you have anything or anyone who can explain Islamic jurisprudence where can I find the list of books published in Arabic language on different topics in metaphysic, philosophy of Islam.

Answers to the questions may be found by using regular reference sources or more likely, by using library files or sources of information and organisation to whom the librarian or the questioner may turn for information.

There are almost as many reasons for the new interest in information as there commentators but it is a by product more of a new technology than of a new intellectual involvement communication with the whole world is now available in almost anyone's living room. Rapid transportation bring the world even closer and whether by choice or by necessity, depleted resources and new centers of power link us all.

Still information was around in one form or another for a good many years before the sudden recognition of its national and international importance. The new interest indicates several developments. First thanks to computers and data base, it is now possible to make information commercially viable.

COMMUNICATION PATTERNS

The communication process may be divided into given elements or constants -

- (1) The communicator or transmitter is the speaker, writer, artist, etc.
- (2) The message, or what the communicator delivers for most library purpose the message is generally known as information.
- (3) The method of transmission or the medium the communicator may deliver the message in the form of book, journal article, dialogue radio speech, film etc.
  - (a) Here the information community including publishers producers indevers, etc enter in.
  - (b) Through the medium the message is processed and recorded on any device from a printed page to a computer disk.
  - (c) The Library then classifies and stores the message in the form given by the proceesors.
  - (d) In most reference service, the transmission of the message usually implies an intermediate agent is the librarian who may assist in the transmission of the message by clarifying what type of informant or communicator is needed by searching the various methods of transmission etc.

- (4) The receiver is the listener, reader, observer, or any one who receives the message originated by the communicator or transmitter and sent via one of the numerous channels.

INFORMATION SCIENCE

Information science is an umbrella term almost all the services offered by librarians or non librarian out of the regular reference service framework. How does information science differ from basic reference works, materials and services. The basic difference between information scientist and reference librarian is that the former will find specific bits of information for the user and will package that information for individual needs usually with the aid of machine readable data base. While the average reference librarian will generally find sources for the user but will not find sources for the user but will never perform literature search. Materials most of the emphasis is on highly specialized material such as articles, reports, monography, manuscript etc. found in library or any other places.

For good reference work it needs sources and is the function performed by reference librarian in providing reference service.

While inquiry into the reference process will continue one thing is agreed on by all librarian must know sources of information. It is because of this that guides to reference materials and selection aids have been prepared. There are many notable examples and only a few are singled out here. The frequently used guide is Sheehy's Guide to reference books and A.J. Walford's Guide to reference material. My aim is to provide complete reference and information source found in Arabic language. The following types of reference books and sources are included:

- (1) Bibliographies and indexes which direct the user to other sources of information.
- (2) Sources of bibliographic information.
- (3) Dictionaries of all kinds.
- (4) Encyclopedias.
- (5) Yearbooks and handbooks.
- (6) Directories of persons and organisations.
- (7) Atlases and gazetteers.

SOURCES OF BIBLIOGRAPHIC INFORMATION

There have been designated as descriptive bibliography and systematic bibliography. The descriptive bibliography describe its physical state its format. This description involves recording its author or authors, title, place of publication, publisher, date of publication, size, number of pages, illustration and when applicable the series to which it belongs for example -

BIBLIOGRAPHIES, AUTHORS.

9. Al-Horrameli, Mohammad bin Hassan. Amal al-Ammel. (  ). Baghdad, Undulus Press, 1385 A.H. 484p.

List of the authors, their published and unpublished books, biographies. About 1122 items arranged alphabetically with name, place and title index.

The systematic bibliography contain subject matter arranged in some system of classification or proper subject headings in terms of some established system for example -

BIBLIOGRAPHIES, ARCHEOLOGICAL, IRAQ, PRE-ISLAMIC PERIOD.

8. Elias, Richard, S. A bibliography of Mesopotamian archaeological sites. Wiesbaden, Harrassowitz, 1972. 113p.

List of publications relating to pre-Islamic sites in Iraq and those sites in Syria and Turkey that show typically Mesopotamian culture.

The descriptive bibliography is concerned with the accurate identification and description of a book as a physical object while systematic bibliography is concerned with its subject matter.

LIBRARY CATALOGUES

Libraries are the principal repositories of recorded knowledge, it follows that the library catalogue is systematically records, by author, title, and subject, the books in a library collection is an important form of systematic bibliography for example -

CATALOGUES, MANUSCRIPTS, COINS, KHEDIVIAL-LIBRARY.

36. Lanepoole, Stanley. Catalogue of the collection of Arabic coins preserved in the Khedivial library. London, Bernard Quaritch, 1897. 384p.

Contains collection of Arabic coins, numbering 3000 coins in the Khedivial library at Cairo. Related to Omayyad and Abbasid caliphs and various Egyptian dynasties. Indices for persons and mint are provided.

UNION CATALOGUES

From catalogues of individual libraries have developed general union catalogue which record in one sequence the holding or part of holding of two or more libraries either on cards or in book form such as -

CATALOGUES-UNION, SERIALS, MIDDLE EAST.

46. Auchterloine, P. Union catalogue of Arabic serials and newspapers in British libraries. London, Mansell, 1977. xxi, 146p.

Sponsored by the middle east libraries committee. About 1000 entries A-Z by Arabic title and by translated title. Entries give place of publication, frequency, first and last date of issue, languages, locations and holdings, variant titles. Indices in transliteration and Arabic script.

Containing book and pamphlets unrestricted by subject, place or date of publication it constitutes the nearest approach to universal bibliography.

NATIONAL BOOK BIBLIOGRAPHIES

Just as a library catalogue serves as an inventory of a library's collection. So a national bibliography serves as an inventory of titles published in a country with their prices e.g.

BIBLIOGRAPHIES, EGYPT, 7TH-11TH CENTURY.

16. Al-Kinidi, Abi Umar Mohammad bin Yousuf. Al-wulah wa kitab al Qudah. ( الولاية وكتاب القضاء ). London, Luzac, 1912. 758p.

Includes bibliographies of Arabic histories in Egypt from seventh to eleventh century A.D. life of al-Khindi, list of his works, true nature of source with index and appendix by Ibn Hajr.

SELECTIVE BIBLIOGRAPHIES

Selective is most often applied to those bibliographies that record the best titles for a particular type of user, library or subject. But it should be noted that all of the types listed thus far are selective in another sense. A library catalogue is selective in that it lists only the holdings of a particular library. National bibliography is selective in being restricted to the output of one country. Subject bibliographies are selective in dealing with only one subject or aspect of a subject and also may be selective in the other sense, by including only the best or most useful material on that subject. For example -

BIBLIOGRAPHIES, PRE-ISLAMIC - 1977 A.D.

27. Anderson, M. Arabic materials in English translation a bibliography of works from the Pre-Islamic period to 1977. Boston, G.K. Hall, 1988. 249p.

Bibliography arranged alphabetically, brief annotations, and good index. Surprisingly comprehensive and useful substitute for Index Islamicus.

SUBJECT BIBLIOGRAPHIES

As the name implies, subject bibliographies are restricted to one subject but usually not restricted to one form of publication or one language. They may be retrospective or current, comprehensive or selective, e.g.

BIBLIOGRAPHIES, SERIALS, SUBJECT.

28. Aman, Mohammad M. Arab periodicals and serials; a subject bibliography. New York, Garland, 1979. 252p.

Subject categories, such as Agriculture, Biology, Business and Industry etc. are in alphabetical therein. About 2,700 items. No index.

INDEXES

Indexes differ from book catalogues and trade bibliographies in recording alphabetically and analytically under appropriate entries, the contents of a book periodical or other document, e.g.

INDEXES, LITERATURE, PERIODICALS.

ABSTRACTS

Abstract differ from indexes in their arrangement which is hierarchical in terms of the appropriate aspects or subdivisions of a subject, because of this arrangement they also contains alphabetically arranged subject and author indexes. They are also differ from indexes in supplying a brief digest or summary of books articles or other documents relating to the subject. A brief condensed accurate representation of the original articles with full bibliographic Abstract may vary in form as well as purpose, e.g.

ABSTRACTS, RELIGIONS.

228. Religions and Theological Abstracts. Youngtown, Ohio, Theological Publications, 1958.

SUBJECT BIBLIOGRAPHIES

Bibliographies devoted to a single subject or aspect of a subject constitute the largest body of bibliographic publication and are often the first point of departure in a search for information. They may be retrospective or current comprehensive or selective annotated or unannotated, e.g.

BIBLIOGRAPHIES, HADIS, 2ND - 14TH CENTURY.

10. Al-Kattani, Mohammad bin Ja'afar. Ar-Risalat al-Mustatrifah. (الرسالة المستطرفة). Damishque, Darul Fikr, 1964. xviii, 351p.

PERIODICAL INDEXES

The periodicals provide a subject and some times author and title approach to individual articles in periodical. They are more upto date reflecting contemporary opinion on subjects or what is known about a subject at a specific time contain more specific subject heading reflecting current terminology. They reveal trends in certain subject fields, e.g.

SOURCES ON WORDS

General language dictionaries have been compiled in modern times by individuals or learned society with one of two basic purposes that are inevitably related (1) to set authoritative standard for spelling, meaning and usage or (2) to record the words of a language with all their uses and meanings. Those dictionaries compiled for the first purpose are known as prescriptive. Those dictionaries compiled for the second purpose are known as descriptive. May are published by reputable publishers. They have a qualified staff of consultants and contributors and have strong editorial staff of lexicographers directed by an experienced editor.

A dictionary is to be used to define not only words we do not want to know but we think the most difficult words to define are not the abstract or the technical, but the words associated with everyday speech or writing for example without a dictionary to explain the meaning of 'door' or be or in vocabulary can be considered in terms of the period of the language covered and the words or entries. The term include special features such as slang dialect obsolete forms and scientific or technical terms. It include prescribed rules for correct usage, spelling where there are several forms of spelling, they should be clearly indicated also indicate the etymology of a word by a short hand system in brackets. The normal procedure is to show the root word in Latin, Hebrew, Urdu or some other languages provide methods of pronunciation synonym and syllabication. Specilized dictionaries such as slang synonyms, antonyms, abbreviations and acronyms. Subject dictionaries bilingual, e.g.

Arabic texts into Germany. Covered all technical terms and phrases in the field of science and technology. Arranged alphabetically with index.

ENCYCLOPEDIAS

It usually will includes detailed survey articles often with bibliographies in certain fields or areas, explanatory material normally shorter and brief informational data such as the birth and death dates of famous people, geographical locations and historical events. Encyclopedias may be divided into three categories (1) by format - there are general and subject set of 15 volumes of the Lisan al-Arab e.g.

ENCYCLOPEDIAS, BIOGRAPHICAL, GENERAL.
